City can create another 'focal point of community identity'

The new McDonald's as a "focal point of community identity" for Solon — what a brilliant idea!

More glorious than anything the Planning Director ever envisioned. More imaginative than anything the Solon City Council has ever thought about. But why stop there?

Almost directly across the street on SOM sits another recently vacated building that can further enhance Solon's cultural and historical identity. A former home of a string of failed restaurants, the building is the perfect location for a strip club. Surely, customers would come from miles around to witness this expanded cultural offering of our city.

It's an ideal location, because not only is it a stone's throw from the Solon Center for the Arts, but just around the corner on Station Street is also the SAC dance studios, where young girls can train to become exotic dancers for this new cultural facility. Furthermore, having limited parking space and problems with left-turn egress, the strip club's location is a perfect match for the planned McDonald's property.

Best of all, the new owners could utilize the name and signage of the building's most recent occupant: Lu-Lu's. A perfect name for our next "focal point of community identity."
